Book: Our Living Bible

The church of Sardis, though corrupt, still has a number of the pure and faithful members worthy to wear white raiment (3: 4-5). White was the hallowed garb of purity among the pagans, as well as among the Christians and Jews. Thus the Israelite priests were dressed in white linen (Exod. 28: 40-42); and whiteness symbolizes purification from sins in Isa. 1: 18. In the Gospels, an angel who came to sit by Jesus' tomb (Mark 16: 5) was clad in a long white garment; and elsewhere in the Revelation the armies of heaven appear in fine, spotless white linen, riding on white horses (Rev. 19: 14). Representations of saints and martyrs in white raiment abound in Early Christian art. Similarly the priests shown sacrificing on the frescoes at Dura-Europus (third century A.D.) are dressed in long white robes and are wearing a high conical cap of the same material. In the religious philosophy of the Alexandrian Jew, Philo, personages bathed in white light appear endowed with mystic-symbolic significance.

He that overcometh the same shall be clothed in white raiment . . . (REV. 3: 5)
